Abstract

This study analyzed the relationship of tradition, religion, and politics the government's efforts to overcome the COVID-19 Pandemic emergency in Indonesia. The relationship between contrasting tends to be the cause of Indonesia's failure to prevent COVID-19 pandemic. This study investigated why the relationship of tradition, religion, and politics is not in line with the government's program in handling the emergency response to the COVID-19 Pandemic in Indonesia? And what is the solution? This article aimed to find successful solutions to government programs in handling the COVID-19 Pandemic emergency in Indonesia. This study used qualitative methods, Foucault's theory on power-relations and historical approaches to facilitating data collection and processing. Meanwhile, data analysis by referring these theories and approaches in stages and layers, gradually using the author's creative imagination. This study found that the Indonesian government made and implemented the right programs following the Indonesian context but has not been able to break the chain of transmission of the COVID-19 pandemic as initially intended. The reason is that in Indonesia, some traditions, religious practices, and political grudges became obstacles to these government programs.

1. Introduction (Heading 1)

Indonesia failed to break the COVID-19 Pandemic transmission chain, which has begun to spread since March 2, 2020, partly because there is a relationship of tradition, religion, and politics that is not in line with the government's program as the emergency response to the COVID-19 pandemic. In this case, first, Indonesia was proud of being able to detect COVID-19 patients. The government has not had the chance to consider that the COVID-19 transmission will be uncontrolled and deathly in Indonesia as today. As of August 16, 2020, in Indonesia, 137,468 patients were treated, reaching 6,071 deaths, and 91,321 recovered [1]. This trend shows an increase in the number of COVID-19 patients after the government announced a new standard policy. The public has interpreted it as a return to the traditional life era by ignoring health protocols[2].

The Indonesian government has begun to earnestly implement the program as an emergency response to the COVID-19 pandemic since a state official, Budi Karya Sumadi, the Minister of Transportation, was early detected as a positive patient infected
